Re: 2013 Lower Klamath River Late Summer Flow Augmentation from Lewiston Dam

Dear Mr Reck:

Please consider these comments on behalf of the Environmental Protection Information Center (EPIC). EPIC is an Arcata, California, based public interest conservation advocacy organization whose members live through out the state and nation, including a significant number of members and supporters that reside in the Klamath and Trinity River Basins. Our organization is working on a day-to-day basis to provide a vehicle for our members to meaningful public participation on crucial natural resource management issues that can impact the livelihoods and well being of our local communities. As such, these comments are provided on the behalf of our membership and activist base, which numbers over 2,000 individuals, and who all have a direct interest in the recovery of salmon runs and the maintenance of healthy aquatic ecosystems in the Lower Klamath and Trinity Rivers.

EPIC Comments 2013 Late Summer Flow Augmentation from Lewiston Dam

Support for Proposed Action

The Draft Environmental Assessment and the Draft Finding of No Significant Impact for the Lower Klamath River Late Summer Flow Augmentation from Lewiston Dam materials were made available by the Bureau of Reclamation (BOR) in a timely fashion for public review. Staff, interns, board members, and supporters associated with our organization have become familiar with the documentation for the Proposed Action. EPIC supports the Proposed Action. We also perceive the proposed action to be an emergency action designed to avoid another disastrous fish-kill as was seen in the Lower Klamath River in the late summer and fall of 2012. The Proposed Action, as important as it is to immediately address clearly dangerous river conditions for salmon and other aquatic species, is inadequate in the long run for securing salmon recovery and addressing other conservation challenges in both the Klamath and Trinity Rivers. EPIC does support the Proposed Action, as it is consistent with the priority use of Trinity River water for in-basin fisheries, which supersede out of basin demands on Trinity water resources.

Comments Addressing Secondary Effects of Proposed Action

To meet the long-term conservation goals of our organization, and the communities we represent in the Klamath and Trinity River Basins, it is imperative that basin wide water resource management solutions be designed and implemented. In the interest of promoting these solutions, and in improving future Proposed Actions that are designed to respond to threats to salmon recovery and the maintenance of healthy aquatic ecosystems in these river basins, EPIC provides the following comments in relation to secondary effects of the Proposed Action.

Our organization is clearly concerned about adequately protecting the fall-run Chinook, as well as other aquatic species in the Klamath Basin. The Bureau of Reclamation's (BOR) proposal to release Trinity water is a federal action that must comply with the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA)<sup>1</sup> and the Endangered Species Act (ESA).<sup>2</sup> Recognizing our stated support for the Proposed Action as a stop gap measure to address dangerous river conditions, we feel that it is important to note that the current draft Environmental Assessment and Finding of No Significant Impact does not take a sufficiently “hard look” at the broader secondary effects of augmenting the summer flow, especially upon species listed as endangered or threatened. The difficult balance between actions protecting fall-run Chinook and actions that may harm other species impels BOR to take a meticulous look at the secondary effects of the proposed release. Furthermore, BOR should consider the role hatchery populations play in aggravating conditions. To those ends, BOR should further consult with the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS). Though NEPA does not require that BOR meet the “best science” standard of the ESA,<sup>3</sup> it is good practice. In addition to consulting directly with the services, BOR should take into consideration the timely May 2013 Biological Opinion on the Klamath project issued jointly by both services.

All parties are, ostensibly, hoping to avoid repeating 2002 where low flows compounded several threats to the fish and resulted in one of the largest historical fish-kills in the West. The 2002 fish-kill left, as the FWS reports, some 34,000 fish dead. Thirty-four thousand was an “estimate of the total number of observable fish that died during the [fish-kill,]”<sup>4</sup> not an estimate of the total fish mortality. The California Department of Fish and Game (DFG) estimated that the actual mortality “may have been more than double that number.”<sup>5</sup> DFG further noted “[f]low is the only controllable factor and tool available in the Klamath Basin (Klamath and Trinity rivers) to manage risks against future epizootics and major adult fish-kills.”<sup>6</sup> In an effort to avoid repeating the 2002 fish-kill, BOR has augmented the flow a number of times.<sup>7</sup> It appears likely that the conditions that led to the 2002 fish-kill will continue to converge in the future, perhaps even more frequently.<sup>8</sup> Several advisory bodies have called for more regular monitoring,<sup>9</sup> for a more consistent process to determine the necessity and quantity of flow augmentation,<sup>10</sup> and for reallocation of Central Valley Project water.<sup>11</sup> Though some progress has been made upon these recommendations, the recurring threats necessitate further action.

Contrary to the DFG’s assertions that flow is the only controllable factor, the quantity of hatchery fish released into the basin is another factor that can be controlled. Over-crowding can compound the same factors that perpetrated the 2002 fish-kill. Though it cannot be used as a reactive tool in the same manner as flow augmentation, hatchery-released fishes’ long-term effects are significant and must be examined under NEPA. The significant population increase from these hatchery fish is increasing the risk to all fish—native and hatchery-raised. In a recent report, the California Hatchery Scientific Review Group identified a large number of possible negative impacts that release of millions of hatchery fish may have on natural populations, including direct competition or predation among hatchery- and natural-origin juveniles, transmission or promotion of disease from hatchery to natural populations, competition between hatchery- and naturally-produced adults for spawning habitat, and reduction in fitness due to interbreeding . . . .<sup>12</sup>

The report specifically recommended that hatchery managers consider scaling back or eliminating certain Chinook hatchery programs to reduce threats from disease.<sup>13</sup> These are precisely the impacts, effects, and recommendations that warrant a NEPA analysis.

Though BOR must conduct additional NEPA analyses and consult with the services, it also must release the proposed 62,000 acre-feet water block. It is on the substance of this fact that our organization provides our support for the Proposed Action. For decades, Congress nonchalantly exported Trinity River water, telling themselves that the Trinity Basin fish and wildlife could not only survive but thrive in spite of diversions sending as much as 90% of the natural flow out of the basin, and in spite of dams eliminating over a hundred miles of important habitat.<sup>14</sup> Surprising no one, the fish stocks dropped precipitously. Eventually even Congress could not ignore the devastating reduction in fish populations. In 1992, they passed the Central Valley Project Improvement Act (CVPIA) to slow, stop, and reverse the damage dealt to the river. The Act lists as its purpose to—first and foremost—“protect, restore, and enhance fish, wildlife, and associated habitats in the Central Valley and Trinity River basins . . . .”<sup>15</sup> No doubt the Record of Decision in 2000 (ROD) struck a compromise between competing interests, but it is clear in its introduction that human misuse and abuse of the basin’s resources are at the core of the environmental devastation it intends to address.<sup>16</sup> These measures correct for the unworkable division of water resources that contributed to the precarious situation in the first place. Proposed Action is necessitated by current conditions in the Lower Klamath River, as well as the established obligation of federal agencies to prioritize in-basin uses of Trinity River water over out-of-basin transfers.

Humboldt County Interest in Water From Trinity Reservoir

The County of Humboldt water interest in the Central Valley Project (CVP) is provided by the statutes of the Trinity River Division Act of 1955. Under the contract that Humboldt County has with the Bureau of Reclamation under the 1955 Act “not less than 50,000 acre-feet of water shall be released from the Trinity Reservoir and made available to Humboldt County and downstream water users.” Though to this date the Bureau of Reclamation has failed to say whether or not it will fulfill its responsibility to provide Humboldt County with its statutory right to this water, it is clear that this 50,000 acre-feet of water, beyond the 62,000 acre-feet specified in the Proposed Action, could be of crucial importance in avoiding a disastrous fish-kill this summer. We encourage the Bureau of Reclamation to act as soon as possible to honor the contractual right that Humboldt County has to this water.

Conclusion

Another fish-kill would affect more than just fish. The local tribes, to whom the U.S. government has a fiduciary duty, are profoundly connected to the fish runs and natural resources of the land. The commercial fishermen depend on these stocks, and recreational fishermen bring economic benefit to the region. The Proposed Action, though inadequate as a long-term solution, is a necessary and imperative stop-gap measure to avoid a fish-kill that would be ecologically devastating, as well as threatening a socio-political tragedy that would seriously impact efforts by Klamath and Trinity Basin communities to develop long-lasting, ecologically responsible, and socially viable solutions to the complex challenges inhibiting salmon recovery and the maintenance of healthy aquatic ecosystems in Klamath Basin rivers. Thank you for your attention to our comments.

Re: Support for Proposed Trinity River Late Summer Flow Augmentation to Prevent Lower Klamath River Fish Kill

Dear Mr. Reck:

I am writing on behalf of the County of Humboldt to provide these comments regarding the proposed release of water from the Trinity reservoir to augment late-Summer flows in the lower Klamath River. It is our understanding that the Bureau of Reclamation is considering the release of up to 62,000 acre-feet of water from the Trinity reservoir to augment flows in both the Trinity and the lower Klamath rivers, beginning in mid-August, so as to help protect migrating fish. The County supports the proposed augmented flows, which are necessary to prevent another catastrophic fish-kill, as happened in 2002.

The Klamath Basin is experiencing serious drought conditions this year which have greatly reduced flows in both the Klamath and Trinity rivers. Though it is not yet August, the Klamath River is already very low and water temperatures have risen to unhealthy levels. These warm, slow-moving waters serve to concentrate nutrients and to encourage the explosive growth of toxic blue-green algae blooms and other fish pathogens, which were implicated in the September 2002 fish kill. That preventable disaster was the largest fish kill in the history of the Northwest, killing some 64,000 Chinook salmon in the lower Klamath River.

This year, favorable ocean conditions have made for projected high returns of Fall Chinook salmon to the Klamath River. Should those returning salmon meet with unhealthy conditions in the river, the impact could be even more devastating than in 2002. There have already been a number of isolated reports of dead salmon, and the fish kill alert level was recently raised to 'yellow.'

Klamath Fisheries History

The mighty Klamath River has historically been the third-most-productive salmon fishery in the U.S, outside of Alaska, surpassed only by the Columbia River in Oregon and the Sacramento-San Joaquin Rivers in California. The Klamath's location provides an important mid-point linkage between the aforementioned West Coast river systems. This powerful economic engine drove the coastal economies of northern California and southern Oregon, blessing us with abundant salmon that supported our commercial, recreational and tribal fisheries.

Over the past 60 years, once-abundant Klamath Chinook salmon have declined sharply, from a historic average of nearly 900,000 to as few as 35,000 or less in some years. In the late 1970's, commercial troll ocean fisheries in the Klamath Management Zone landed an average of over 3.6 million pounds of salmon. For the period from 2005 through 2009, that number had plummeted to an average of just 124,000 pounds, representing a decline of 98 percent for the ports of Eureka and Crescent City. This precipitous decline has brought the shuttering of commercial processing facilities, the loss of on-shore jobs, an ever-dwindling fishing fleet, and pain and suffering among the families in our fishing communities.

The impact of another fish kill in the Klamath River would be felt far beyond the ports of Eureka, Crescent City and Brookings. Klamath salmon inter-mingle in the ocean with other salmon stocks from as far away as Monterey, CA to central Washington. In this way, declines in Klamath Chinook salmon stocks can affect fisheries across the entire West Coast, triggering ocean salmon season closures over most of the northern California and Oregon coastline and other restrictions as far away as southern Washington.

Humboldt County's 1959 Contract

The County of Humboldt has a unique and specific interest in the release of water from the Trinity reservoir. This interest is memorialized in Section 2 of the 1955 Trinity River Act (TRA), which states "Provided further, That not less than 50,000 acre-feet shall be released annually from the Trinity Reservoir and made available to Humboldt County and downstream water users."

Pursuant to the TRA, this allocation of water (hereinafter "the Humboldt County water") was later memorialized in the June 19th, 1959 contract between the United States and Humboldt County, which states "The United States agrees to release sufficient water from Trinity and/or Lewiston Reservoirs into the Trinity River so that not less than an annual quantity of 50,000 acre-feet will be available for the beneficial use of Humboldt County and other downstream users."

It was clearly anticipated that the in-stream flows allocated by the TRA might need to be supplemented in certain low-flow years to augment the baseline in-stream flows for fish. There is no language in the 1955 TRA nor in the 1959 contract which either states or implies that the Humboldt County water be limited in any way, allowing the County to call upon its release at its sole discretion for either in-stream or consumptive uses, as the County sees fit.

The baseline flows for fish were re-adjusted as a result of the 2000 Trinity River Record of Decision (ROD), which prescribed variable flows for the provision of physical fish habitat and the restoration of riverine processes. However, the Humboldt County Water remained additive to these new flows prescribed by the ROD, again anticipating that the release of additional water might be necessary in certain years for the protection of fish.

Whose Water Is It?

Neither the TRA allocation nor the 1959 contract have ever been honored by the federal government, depriving Humboldt County of its ability to be a part of the solution in low-flow years such as this. Were the federal government to honor its agreement, there would be an additional 50,000 acre-feet of water available on a regular basis, which the County could dedicate towards fish.

The Bureau of Reclamation has released additional water from the Trinity Reservoir in past years when similar draught or low-flow conditions existed, yet the Bureau has specifically refused to link these releases with the Humboldt County contract. If the water being released is not the Humboldt County water, then this begs the question: Whose water is it? It is our understanding that the Delta-Mendota Water District has already filed a 60-day notice of intent to sue in an attempt to stop the water releases, as the BOR has not made a determination as to 'ownership' of the water being considered for release.

Over the years, Humboldt County has repeatedly and consistently called for the Bureau of Reclamation to honor both the TRA and the 1959 contract. Were the Bureau to do so, then the County of Humboldt would be in a position to unilaterally help increase flows in years such as this, while also helping the Bureau avoid litigation with other Central Valley water interests.

Conclusion

The County of Humboldt supports the proposed late-Summer release of water from the Trinity Reservoir to augment flows in the lower Klamath River. These increased flows are necessary to avoid another catastrophic fish kill and to protect our region from the devastating impacts such an event would have upon our fishing industry, our community and our economy. We further ask that this release be coordinated with the County, tribes and other downstream interests.

We thank you for your attention to this matter, and we look forward to continued discussions. Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions or if there is any additional information I may provide for you.

Ryan Sundberg, Chair

Re: MEETING REQUEST, Draft Environmental Assessment 2013 Lower Klamath River Late Summer Flow Augmentation from Lewiston Dam- Comments of the Hoopa Valley Tribe

Dear Secretary Jewell

Our fishery resources, which the United States holds in trust, are at risk of catastrophic annual fish kills because of the Department's policies and practices in managing the water resources of the Central Valley Project (CVP) in California and the Klamath Irrigation Project in Oregon. We are asking you to intervene promptly and to prioritize in your new administration the realignment of the Department's management of its Reclamation program with President Obama's commitment to protect tribal resources under the federal trust responsibility.

The Hoopa Valley Tribe has worked for decades to restore and maintain tribal fisheries in the Klamath basin that have been devastated by the Department's policies and conduct. In the Klamath basin, the Klamath Irrigation Project and a federally licensed hydroelectric project have destroyed tribal fisheries in Oregon and California. The Trinity River, the Klamath's largest tributary, is the site of the CVP's Trinity Division which diverts water into California's Central Valley. That water is used to produce crops worth billions of dollars and generates similarly valuable hydropower. The Law of the Trinity River requires that only water surplus to needs of the Klamath/Trinity basin are available for diversion. However, the CVP water and power contractors have persistently and aggressively worked to defeat that priority and have too often persuaded officials in the federal government to ignore the law that they are sworn to uphold.

The urgency with which we request your intervention cannot be overstated. The crisis affecting our fishery implicates irrigation and hydropower generation in southern Oregon and the complex and controversial Bay Delta Conservation Planning process in California. Our tribe's interests are the fulcrum on which solutions to these widely diverse water issues will be leveraged.

At every level of the Bureau of Reclamation, officials have acknowledged that crisis in Klamath basin fisheries has become the "new normal." A response commensurate with that crisis is necessary. Please consider the comments we have provided here and arrange for you and your staff, especially Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs Kevin Washburn, Reclamation Commissioner Michael Connor, and Solicitor Hilary Tompkins to meet with us at your earliest convenience. A meeting with you would enable us to lay out the issues and the solutions we propose for the crisis that threatens to destroy one of the most important salmon fisheries on the Pacific Coast. As always, our Tribe wishes to work collaboratively with the Department of the Interior on these often controversial and complex resource management issues. However, I cannot underscore the political ramifications should Interior's actions result in another large scale fish die-off in the Klamath or Trinity Rivers. Hopefully, the tragic events that devastated our people in 2002 will not ever be witnessed again. Please contact my office directly should you wish to discuss this matter more fully.

Summary Comments on Draft Environmental Assessment:

In reply to the Bureau of Reclamation's 17 July 2013 call for comments (Press Release MP-13-132) on the referenced matter the Hoopa Valley Tribe (Tribe) provides the following comments on the Draft Environmental Assessment and draft Finding of No Significant Impact.

The Tribe has sought supplemental flows to protect salmon in the lower Klamath River since 2002 and continues to support supplemental flows in 2013.

The fish kill of 2002 resulted in devastating impacts to Klamath-Trinity fall Chinook; upwards of 60,000 fall Chinook died in that catastrophic event. All federal agencies are charged with a trust responsibility to protect tribal fishery resources. The Secretary of the Interior is responsible for the Bureau of Reclamation's operation of the Central Valley Project and the Klamath Project. Her fiduciary duty requires her to operate both projects conservatively to avoid risk to tribal trust fishery resources in the Klamath River.

As has occurred with increasing regularity in the past decade, adverse conditions in the Klamath River have created a high risk of a large-scale fish kill that would severely damage tribal trust assets. The impacts of such a disastrous event would affect not only the 2013 fall spawning run and tribal and sport harvest, but also long term salmon restoration programs for the Klamath-Trinity Basin.

Conditions in the lower Klamath River have been poor and continue to degrade. At the time of this writing the USGS gage "Lower Klamath near Klamath" (KNK) has fallen to 2,550 cfs. Consistent with the pattern for this time of year, flows will continue to fall over the coming weeks. Water temperatures cooler than 23°C are favorable for fall Chinook migration in Klamath River (Strange 2010). Water temperatures in the lower Klamath have already risen, averaging in the range of 22 to 23°C. These temperatures represent a potential thermal barrier to the migration of fall Chinook which typically arrive at the Klamath River estuary by 1 August. Of added concern this year is the predominance of non-Trinity origin fall Chinook which typically enter the Klamath estuary earlier than Trinity origin fish. Escapement to the Klamath River is forecast at 272,000 adults, with a predominance of age 4 (brood year 2009) fish. Together, these factors--low water velocity, increased temperatures, high fish populations, early migration, and slower passage through the lower Klamath River create conditions for epidemic disease in the migrating fish.

Accordingly, Reclamation must take timely and effective action to avoid a fish kill. One such action is to increase flows before signs of impaired migration and/or onset of disease outbreak occur. However, the Preferred Alternative hinges on reactive releases of supplemental flows based on a metric yet to be developed from in-river harvest data-- a metric indicating "a good proportion of the run has entered the lower Klamath River". Such a belated and imprecise trigger is of dubious merit, as once established a disease outbreak cannot be treated. Prophylactic releases are required.

Once triggered, the Preferred Alternative would provide for supplemental flows to continue as late as 30 September. However, extension of the supplemental flows beyond 21 September is dependent upon a water temperature that reaches or exceeds 23°C. The EA identifies neither how that temperature criterion was chosen, nor how this threshold is to be measured (e.g. instantaneous daily peak) or calculated (e.g. daily mean, running average). Use of a daily peak value would be the most risk-averse approach.

Along with effective action this year, a long-term plan for supplemental flows is needed. In 2012, former Reclamation Mid-Pacific Regional Director Don Glaser informed the Tribe that crisis had become the norm in terms of water supplies needed for fishery protection in the lower Klamath River. He added that a permanent solution for fishery protection is needed. In a 21 February 2013 letter to Secretary Salazar we reported that we concurred with the Regional Director and urged the development of a permanent solution. Nearly three months later on 14 May 2013, Bureau of Reclamation Commissioner Connor replied for the Secretary. He acknowledged that a long-term approach to lower Klamath fishery protection was needed and said that "we are continuing our efforts to develop such an approach."

A long-term plan requires coordinated operation of both Central Valley Project and Klamath Irrigation Project facilities because lower Klamath flow conditions are influenced directly by both projects. However, the Klamath Project Manager reported to the Tribe on 12 February 2013, during a meeting in Klamath Falls, that he has received no instructions to manage the Klamath Reclamation Project to ensure the availability of supplemental flows for fishery protection in the lower Klamath River other than meeting ESA requirements for ESA listed Southern Oregon Northern California Coast coho salmon. In the meantime, no permanent solution has been forthcoming and the fishery remains at severe risk. Lower Klamath River fishery protection is an integral component of the Tribe's long pending (since 2009) proposal for coordinated management of Klamath-Trinity resources through a Joint Directorate (provided previously to the Department).

Specific Comments on Draft Environmental Assessment:

The Tribe is persuaded that the Preferred Alternative requires amendment consistent with the following comments.

- (1) The supplemental flow releases should begin on 1 August to ensure that flows in the lower Klamath River at USGS gage KNK do not fall below 3,200 cubic feet per second (cfs) from 1 August through 30 September.

- (2) In the event of disease outbreak among salmon holding in the lower Klamath, flows at KNK gage should be doubled for a seven day period, in accordance with prior recommendations from Trinity Management Council Fall Flow Subgroup (2012 Fall Flow Release Recommendation, May 31, 2012 – Memo to Brian Person, Northern California Area Office).

- (3) All TRD water allocated for the supplemental flows should be accounted for in a way that recognizes the priority of that use over diversions to the Central Valley as required by the Law of the Trinity River. Thus any risk of shortage in 2013 or future years must be assigned to water allocated for diversion to the Central Valley, not to the releases allocated to the Trinity River under the Record of Decision of 2000, including water required to be held in carryover storage for temperature maintenance for fishery restoration in the Trinity River.

- (4) The Preferred Alternative should include a commitment to a programmatic assessment, in consultation with the Hoopa Valley Tribe--inclusive of the entire Klamath-Trinity River basin--for use in developing a long-term solution to the needs of the lower Klamath River fishery.

- (5) The Preferred Alternative should recognize that Trinity Division must be operated to release annually and make available 50,000 acre-feet of water to Humboldt County and downstream users pursuant to the second proviso in section 2 of the Act of 12 August 1955 separate from and in addition to water released under the first proviso for: (i) the 2000 Trinity River Mainstem Fishery Restoration Record of Decision (ROD) and (ii) supplemental flow releases for the lower Klamath fishery.

- (6) The Preferred Alternative should make clear that releases of Trinity Division water for ceremonial uses by the Hoopa Valley Tribe are independent of the flow releases identified in the Preferred Alternative for fish passage.

I have read that the Bureau of Reclamation proposes to augment lower Klamath River flows to reduce the likelihood of a fish die-off. Reclamation would operate Trinity and Lewiston Reservoirs to target a minimum flow of 2,800 cfs in the lower Klamath River between August 15 and September 21, 2013.

I would love to see this come to pass. I would hate to see another die off as happened in 2002. Please save our salmon. I can grow anything in my backyard that those farmers grow. For the life of me, I cannot grow a salmon. They need to be protected where they are.

Thank you.

Atten; Don Reck,

I have been a resident in Trinity County for the past 8 years and have lived in Northern California over 30 years.

I find it hard to believe that there are people, organization and politicians that deny a TEMPORARY increase of water flows to help save the struggling anadromous fish migrations on the Trinity & Klamath Rivers. These delicate rivers can not with stand another MASSIVE FISH KILL that happened a few years ago.

There's an old saying "The Straw that broke the Camels Back"..... If you do not give these fish more water (Which You Can)..... the consequences could be devastating to the future fish population in the Trinity and Klamath River.

I hope in 10,15 years from now we're not all have the conversation "I remember how good the Salmon & Steelhead.... was"

The Bureau of Reclamation needs to hold there ground and insist the increase flows happen.... for the future of Trinity River.

Sincerely,

Bob Norman

RE: Comments in Support of Draft EA/FONSI on proposed Trinity River
Flow Augmentation to Reduce Risks of a 2013 Klamath River Fish Kill

Dear BOR Colleagues:

As the largest organization of commercial fishing families on the West Coast, we strongly support, and urge the BOR to go forward with its proposed flow augmentation proposal to put up to 62,000 acre-feet of additional Trinity-origin water back into the Trinity River from August 15th through September 21st (as described in the Project EA and FONSI documents), in order to reduce the risk of another major Klamath River adult spawner fish kill like we suffered through in 2002.

Another Klamath adult spawner fish kill like 2002 would be economically and biologically disastrous for the West Coast's slowly recovering ocean commercial salmon fisheries. But unfortunately, the same kinds of conditions as caused the 2002 fish kill – i.e., a very high spawner escapement run due to good ocean conditions, coming into a badly compromised river with too little water, and thus a greatly reduced biological “carrying capacity” – is fast shaping up to reoccur once again this year. If anything, conditions this year are likely to be worse for the returning fall-run Chinook salmon than in 2002.

That 2002 adult fish kill – said to be the worst adult fish kill in U.S. history – contributed greatly to a very low 2006 Klamath River returning fall-run Chinook adult year-class that in turn

To: U. S. Bureau of Reclamation
Re: BOR Trinity Pulse Flows
30 July 2013

triggered the nearly coast-wide, Klamath-driven “weak stock management” ocean salmon fisheries closures of the 2006.

Those 2006 Klamath weak stock-driven emergency conservation closures economically devastated coastal fishing-dependent communities from Monterey, CA, to well up into the State of Washington – at a total cost to these regional coastal fishing-dependent economies of an estimated $200 million in economic losses. In fact, that 2006 California-to-Washington ocean salmon fishery closure was so bad that it was formally declared a “fisheries disaster” by the U.S. Secretary of Commerce, and required Congressional disaster assistance of $60.4 million just to keep the coastal commercial fishing infrastructure from utterly collapsing.

In a 24 April 2013 letter (see ATTACHMENT A) from the Pacific Fishery Management Council (PFMC), the PFMC also strongly recommended such an emergency pulse flow, also pointing out that this year’s conditions are, in some respects, even worse than those that triggered the 2002 fish kill. PCFFA fully supports the BOR’s proposed pulse flow, for the same reasons provided in the attached PFMC letter, which we offer for the record.

Please feel to contact me at the contact address, phone or email above if there are any questions.

Secretary of the Interior
U.S. Department of the Interior

RE: Action Requested to Prevent Klamath River Fish Kill

Dear Secretary Jewell:

The Pacific Fishery Management Council (Pacific Council) would like to thank all those in the Department of the Interior (DOI) involved in the water management decision-making designed to protect against a fish kill in the Klamath River during the record high run of fall Chinook salmon that returned in 2012. We view the 2012 experience to be a very successful example of proactive conservation, and are asking that similar protection occur for another exceptionally large return of salmon this fall.

In 2011, the Pacific Council forecasted a new record high return of fall Chinook to the Klamath and Trinity Rivers; the actual return was the largest adult natural spawning escapement in the Klamath River Basin (122,000) since comprehensive records were initiated in 1978, along with record tribal and non-tribal in-river fishery catches. Excellent cooperation of Federal and state water managers provided enhanced river flows that enabled this record salmon run to successfully return to its spawning areas in the Klamath and Trinity rivers. The lack of any observed fish kill in spite of very low fall season flow conditions demonstrated the value and importance of real-time flow management for the Klamath River fall Chinook resource. We hope that similar cooperation in 2013 will again allow a large salmon run to spawn successfully.

This year, the Pacific Council is concerned that projected low flows in the Klamath River will substantially affect salmon essential fish habitat (EFH) and could create conditions leading to a fish kill in the Klamath River during the fall Chinook migration in 2013, such as occurred in 2002.

The purpose of this letter is to recommend, as we did last year, that the Bureau of Reclamation (BOR) proactively take action to minimize the potential for another fish kill by augmenting flow releases to alleviate stressful conditions for the 2013 fall Chinook run as these fish migrate through the Lower Klamath River. In particular, we recommend that BOR reserve an adequate block of water for real-time flow management during the fall season to ameliorate expected low flow conditions in the Lower Klamath River, if needed, as was done successfully in 2012.

As you know, the Pacific Council is one of eight Regional Fishery Management Councils established by the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA) of 1976, and recommends management actions for Federal fisheries off Washington, Oregon, and California. The MSA includes provisions to identify, conserve, and enhance EFH for species regulated under a Pacific Council fisheries management plan. Each Council is authorized under MSA to comment on any Federal or state activity that may affect the habitat, including EFH, of a fishery resource under its authority. Furthermore, for activities that the Pacific Council believes are likely to substantially affect the habitat of an anadromous fishery resource under its authority, the Pacific Council is obligated to provide comments and recommendations (MSA §305(b)(3)).

Forecasted Flows

Available data indicate that the 2013 water supply in the Klamath Basin will be below normal.<sup>1</sup> Precipitation has been substantially lower than average since January of this year. Air temperatures throughout the Basin have been above normal. Late winter or early spring precipitation events are not expected to change water supply conditions overall.

Forecasted Run Size

At the same time, the 2013 fall Chinook escapement is projected to be the second largest return on record. Alternatives for marine fisheries and river return in 2013 have been modeled by the Pacific Council's Salmon Technical Team. Ocean fishery modeling, including projections of the number of fish returning to the Klamath Basin, currently forecast a return of over 271,000 adult fall Chinook to the Klamath River mouth, second only in magnitude to the in-river population of 2012 (see figure below). This is nearly 1.7 times the 2002 adult run size associated with the 2002 fish kill and only 10 percent less than the observed record run of 302,100 adult fish in 2012. The positive performance of the 2009 brood year, as evidenced by the age-three returns last year, speaks to a high abundance of large, age-four Chinook contributing to the 2013 run. Hence, with respect to biomass, the 2013 river run may be comparable to that seen in 2012.

Analysis

The low flows, combined with such a large run, could result in conditions similar to those that led to the September 2002 fish kill, when more than 33,000 adult salmon died in the Lower Klamath River. Several analyses, including one produced by the USFWS,<sup>2</sup> concluded that low river flow and high densities of fish contributed to the outbreak of two diseases (Ich and columnaris) that caused the 2002 fish kill. The evidence is compelling that lower-than-average hydrology and greater-than-average fish densities may once again compromise the safe passage of adult fall Chinook in Klamath River in 2013.

Therefore, we recommend you pursue measures to provide additional flow during the fall Chinook migration period, if necessary, to maintain the quality of EFH for salmon and to minimize the likelihood of another fish kill. We recommend that the BOR work with the Klamath Basin’s biologists and scientists, such as the Trinity River Restoration Program’s Flow Group, to determine the best manner for using this water to minimize the potential for another fish kill. This was successfully done in the fall of 2012 when 3,000 acre feet of supplemental flows were provided specifically to improve upstream migration conditions and reduce the fish health risk for the record fall Chinook return; and no fish kill, in fact, was observed. The Klamath Basin technical team infrastructure to monitor river flows, water temperatures, and the progression of the fall season returns remains in place, and is the appropriate technical forum to help guide BOR’s real-time flow management actions to protect these fish.

The figure below contains the post-season estimated Klamath River adult fall Chinook estimated run sizes for 1978 – 2012 and the projected abundance for 2013.

Recommendation

As noted above, anticipated water supply and fish abundance for 2013 suggests a need to provide supplemental flow releases comparable to the safe thresholds identified in BOR’s Environmental Assessment for late-summer flow augmentation in 2012<sup>3</sup>. This conclusion is additionally informed by the interagency federal trust responsibility for the tribal fishery in the Klamath and Trinity Rivers and prudent management considerations.

Accordingly, the Pacific Council recommends that the Department of the Interior initiate planning now and take all necessary steps in the coming months to ensure sufficient water is available to minimize the potential for another fish kill if conditions in the Klamath River prove to be dangerous to migrating Chinook salmon in the late summer and fall of 2013.

We recommend that you do what is necessary to ensure an adequate amount of supplemental water for release from the Trinity and/or Upper Klamath basins during the peak migration and holding timeframe for the fall Chinook return. Such flow augmentation should be designed to maintain the quality of salmon EFH and minimize the likelihood of another fish kill, taking into consideration the river flow patterns and salmon abundance that resulted in the 2002 fish kill. To that end, we recommend that the Department of Interior work with the Klamath Basin's tribal, state, and non-DOI Federal biologists and scientists to determine the best manner for using this water to minimize the potential for another fish kill.

In closing, it may be that this 2012-2013 situation reoccurs more frequently in the future than in the past few decades. Towards that possibility we recommend that the Department consider developing a permanent and comprehensive plan to address the needs of lower Klamath fish passage. The Pacific Council is prepared to assist with this effort in any way possible.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Sincerely,

I am so pleased the Bureau of reclamation is considering the increased flows of the Trinity River to protect our precious salmon & Steelhead resource. I have lived in Trinity Co. for the last 23 years and Redding before that for 35 years. I did not get to see the area pre-dam, I can only imagine what it was like. I get so tired of all the politics involved with the release of water, it seems that the big money behind the central valley and the stake holders of the little Trinity River is like David fighting Goliath. The Salmon and wildlife of the Trinity is something that needs to be protected at all costs even at the expense of water sales to the central valley big business interests. I hope that you guys stick to your finding of no measurable impact by making these release's possible.

We all commend you guys for this release.

Thank you

Re: Draft Environmental Assessment: 2013 Lower Klamath River Late Summer Flow
Augmentation from Lewiston Dam

Dear Mr. Reck,

The Yurok Tribe appreciates that the Bureau of Reclamation is proposing to release water to reduce the chance of a catastrophic fish kill. We continue to believe that these types of measures should not be considered routine, and we reiterate that we do not support increased flows such as the proposed action except under extraordinary circumstances, such as this year. In particular, the times we believe this type of action is warranted are those rare years when we face the combination of an large run combined with dry hydrologic conditions.

Overall, we support the proposed action, but as stated in more detail below, we believe that a flow of 3200 cubic feet per second (cfs) at the Klamath gage, such as was provided during 2012, would be more protective against a catastrophic fish kill event such as happened in 2002.

- Page 1, paragraph 3: (Background): Historical context and potential causative factors contributing to the 2002 lower Klamath fish kill should include a comparison of the projected 2013 run size to that of 2002, when the fish kill occurred; this year's projected run size is 1.7 times greater what returned during 2002.
- Page 1, paragraph 4 (Background): An additional factor causing concern among biologists in 2013 is the presence of very large numbers of juvenile fish in the river. Specifically, there is concern that the large numbers of juvenile fish congregating in thermal refuge areas could contract the ich disease and transmit it amongst themselves prior to the commencement of the fall run.
- Page 2, paragraph 2 (Need for the Proposal): Failure to minimize the risk of an additional fish kill, by supplementing Lower Klamath flows this fall, could result in substantial mortality of ESA listed SONCC coho salmon.

- Page 3, 2 ¶ (Cultural Resources): Klamath-Trinity fish populations are central to the Yurok Tribe culture and existence. Over centuries, the Yurok Tribe's culture, ceremonies and religion have grown out of the Yurok people's dependence and connection to the river and all of the fish populations it supports. We believe that due to existing physical and biological conditions in 2013, significant harm to the fisheries resources of the Yurok Tribe is likely to occur under the No Action Alternative, which would directly have a negative impact on the Tribe's cultural resources. Cultural Resources include, but are not limited to, access to family fishing holes that can become nonexistent during drought years, inhibiting the provision of subsistence fish to ceremonies held throughout Yurok ancestral territory. Lack of additional fall flows would cause a negative impact to fish populations which are perhaps the single most important cultural resource to the Yurok people. All are a part of the Klamath Riverscape, proved to be eligible for inclusion on the National Register in a report prepared by Thomas King in 2004 titled "First Salmon".
- Page 3, 3 (Sacred Sites) A No Action Alternative could prevent access to sacred sites throughout the Klamath River Watershed. With historically low flowing water, access to sites by the river including traditional fishing holes could be impacted.
- Page 5, last paragraph (Proposed Action): The Yurok Tribe continues to believe, based on evidence analyzed with regard to the 2012 flow augmentation, that a 3200 cfs minimum flow at the Klamath gage near Klamath (KNK) would be more protective of the fish resources. We base this concern on the memorandum dated May 31, 2012 from the Fall Flow Subgroup to Brian Person, Northern California Area Office Manger, titled 2012 Fall Flow Release Recommendation and the 2010 technical memo developed by Joshua Strange<sup>1</sup>. Available data on river flow, water temperature, projected fish abundance, as well as high juvenile abundance, show that the circumstances in 2013 support the same action (3200 cfs at the mouth of the Klamath) as happened in 2012.
- Page 6, Paragraph 1 (Proposed Action): We strongly believe that if the catch data or other indications show that fall-run Chinook salmon have entered the river earlier than August 15, the flow augmentation should begin earlier also. Furthermore, we believe that the augmentation should begin no later than August 15 regardless of whether the main portion of the run has entered the river. This is because the purpose of the flow augmentation is to break up the life cycle of Ich before it develops to epidemic levels. If early-entering fish are developing ich, flow augmentation before the main run enters the infectious zone would be crucial to preventing a runaway epidemic.

Furthermore, we expect a large component of this year's run to be from the Klamath Basin, which is known to enter the river earlier than fish destined for the Trinity River. This is based upon return data at age-3 from 2012<sup>2</sup> and the fact that the 2013 inriver run is comprised largely of age-4 fish<sup>3</sup>. Therefore, we expect much of the run to be relatively early during 2013.

- Page 15, Table 3. (Spring-run Chinook salmon periodicity): Table 3 indicates spring-run Chinook salmon migration in the mainstem Klamath River from mid-March through the end of June. Based on coded-wire tag recoveries in the Yurok Tribal fishery in the Lower Klamath River, we recommend extending this periodicity for adult spring chinook migration in the mainstem through mid-August.
- Page 16-17 (Environmental Consequences, No Action): The EA does not address the potential consequences of a fish kill preventing the Trinity River Restoration Program from meeting natural fall-run Chinook escapement goals.
- We recommend that a thorough monitoring program be implemented during implementation of the proposed action to assess affects to the Klamath Basin ecosystem and to help guide future management actions.

In summary, we want to express our support for the proposal to increase flow in the Lower Klamath to minimize the risk of a fish kill during 2013. However, two primary recommendations we have are that flows be increased to 3,200 cfs and that the flow increase reach the Lower Klamath no later than August 15th. If you have any questions regarding these comments, don't hesitate to contact myself or Dave Hillemeier (Fisheries Program Manager) at the address in letterhead.

Lower Klamath Flows

To: "sha-slo-klamathflows@usbr.gov" <sha-slo-klamathflows@usbr.gov>

Dear BOR Officer,

This is a re-print of a letter I received:

John Harlan Hey Jules dad said they are stacked up at the mouth of Hopkins Creek. He called me about a week ago. He says you can see them from the road. He also told me he is not seeing them at bluff yet which is pretty uncommon for late July. We have been fishing there since 1961 he said he has never seen the river this low this early. He told me the temps are too high and we are gonna have a problem. Here is a copy of his report Hi Friends of E Ne Nuck: We got big trouble. Today I went down to look at the water I fish normally in September, and it is lower than I have ever seen it. It's July 12, and it is lower than I have ever seen it in OCTOBER! Our problem is water temperature. I'll try to put it in terms even a politician can understand. The lower the water is, the longer it takes it to flow, being warmed by the sun, before it gets to the ocean. I don't have statistics, but I have feet on the ground here historically, having fished here every year since 1961, except for 1963, when I was on active duty in the service. I have been on the rivers daily here at Weitchpec from June through October for the last 18 years. This I know, the water gets progressively warmer as it flows down to the mouth. Some years it gains about a degree F for every 5 miles it flows, depending mainly on the velocity of flow. It is flowing very slowly this year, the water temperatures in the lower river will be lethal to the salmon. When the salmon are suffering from lack of dissolved oxygen in the water because of the high temps, they hold up wherever they can find the coolest water, and don't have the ability to get upstream where the water temperatures will be low enough to survive. It is absolutely critical that the salmon get past the lethally warm waters in the lower rivers. We are going to have a fish kill. It is not a question of whether it's going to happen, but of how many salmon will die. The only way this can be mitigated at all is to increase the cold flows from the deep reservoirs on the Trinity River. If that is not done there will be hell to pay. Columnaris, or what the fisherman call gill rot, effects the fish dramatically when the water temperatures are above 19°C (66°F), and the river temperatures here now are consistently running around 22°C (75°F to 79°F) or higher, reaching the high 70s F in the afternoons. There is daily about a 4°F degree difference between the lowest temperatures in the morning and the evening temperatures. Let me summarize to make sure everyone gets it. Low flow equals slow flow, which equals hot water, which equals dead fish! There will be no act of God that will save the fish this year, their survival is 100% in the hands of the Feds controlling the flows from Trinity Lake. Please use any influence you may have to educate everyone of what is about to happen here. Real time water temperatures are posted on the Yurok Tribal web page under departments, environmental, real time monitoring, from sensors in the rivers at strategic points. It is a very useful tool. Your old friend, John W. Harlan

In closing, I am just as worried about the Upper Klamath River as well. What happens to the fish once they reach Weitchpec? I do not know of the complexities involved in releasing water from Copco Dams, but surely the benefit of doing so, would outweigh the temporary loss of lakefront property. Please consider releasing water from Copco.

Thank you
James Dunlap

Letter: Greetings,

NEVER AGAIN: BOR Please Release Water from the Trinity and Klamath Rivers to Avoid a Klamath Fish Kill

For the last two years low flows in the Klamath River, due to the overdrawing of Upper Klamath Lake by farmers and drought conditions, have lead to additional releases of Trinity River water being needed to avoid a possible large-scale fish kill in the Klamath River. This year a 60-day notice of intent to sue has been filed by Central Valley farmers, who currently receive Trinity diversions, to stop the needed release of Trinity River water.

Water quality conditions in the Klamath and Trinity Rivers are dire and already reports of sick fish and extremely warm water are occuring in the Klamath and Trinity Rivers. This coupled with the fact a large run of salmon is beginning to come up the river is making a fish kill possible.

The Klamath salmon run regulates fishing for all those who depend on salmon in Oregon and California. Another fish kill could lead to economic disasters for the states and lack of food for California's largest Tribes. Please make a decision based on science and release this water and also make water available from the upper Klamath to avoid a fish kill. We need to avoid a fish kill below and above the Trinity River.

I also ask that the Klamath and Trinity water planning in California and Oregon be coordinated in the future because the Trinity is diverted into the Central Valley Project and the Klamath is diverted to upper basin farmers in Oregon.

Tribes and environmentalist have warned for years that the fact the BOR and states are not coordinating Klamath and Trinity water planning could lead to a crisis like the one we now face.

Regardless of the cause of this crisis, I support emergency Trinity and Klamath water releases in the short term and whole basin water planning and management to restore the Klamath and Trinity salmon in the future.

Not releasing water is a chance we cannot afford to take.

This year as the drought in the Upper Klamath River, and related water shut offs for Upper Basin ranchers, have made national headlines, the dire conditions in the lower Klamath River have largely been ignored by the media. Last time this happened over 60,000 adult salmon died in the Klamath River. This fish kill lead to years of commercial fishing disasters for California and Oregon's fishing communities, along with food emergencies for California's largest Tribes.

Now the Central Valley farmers, which divert the Klamath's largest tributary, the Trinity River, have entered the Klamath water wars by filing an intent to sue if additional Trinity water is released into the Klamath claiming they are also suffering from water reductions due to drought.
